Quesenberry's Inc. chosen as general contractor for $30 million Convocation Center

Big Stone Gap, VA: Quesenberry's Inc. is pleased to announce that it has been chosen as the general contractor for the new Convocation Center at The University of Virginia's College at Wise, the largest single capital project in the College's history.

"The University and College are confident in Quesenberry's knowledge of the local construction market, our competitive pricing, our reputation for timely delivery and the ability to devote competent and dedicated staff to the project," said Spencer Quesenberry, President of Quesenberry's Inc. "We're very proud to have been the firm chosen for such an important project for the College and one so vital to the economic development of Southwest Virginia."

"This is going to be the centerpiece for the region," said Delegate Terry Kilgore. "The Convocation Center will bring a lot to the region that we don't have right now."

The Convocation Center, scheduled for completion in two years, will seat 3,000 to 4,000 for sporting events, concerts and other activities, and will be the region's first venue to seat large crowds. Quesenberry's will be working with VMDO Architects and expects the project to begin sometime in October, 2008.

For 60 years, Quesenberry's has stood for quality construction in Southwestern Virginia. The company has knowledge and experience in multiple industries including commercial, industrial and municipal, several of which are LEED-certified projects. Quesenberry's serves Southwestern Virginia, Eastern Tennessee and Southwestern Kentucky.
